Freedom July 3, 2022

How would we define freedom? We love it, and we fight to preserve it, but what does it really mean to us? Does freedom mean that we have the ability to live our lives any way we choose? Yes it does. Does freedom mean that if we choose to live our lives in certain ways we will not experience any consequences for our actions? Well, no. It seems to me that people today view freedom as carte blanche to do anything and everything.

Freedom opposes restriction, and restriction takes many different forms. Some restriction comes from the unjust and tyrannical, and we must fight against it. Some restriction, however, comes from love and concern, a genuine desire to help. Take, for example, a seat belt. We wear seat belts because the law tells us to, but also because, even though they restrict us in our vehicles, they would protect us in accidents.

The Bible speaks of freedom and restriction both in good and bad lights based on the situation. It speaks of good freedom in Romans 6:18 where it says that Christians have become free from sin. Bad freedom comes in Romans 1:24 where it says that God gave up the Gentiles to uncleanness. Bad restriction comes in John 8:34 where Jesus says that whoever commits sin serves sin. Finally, the Bible speaks of good restriction in Romans 6:18 where it calls Christians servants of righteousness. Love freedom; praise it. But let us never pursue it so much that we forget to serve God.
